'Oh, it was just a dream,' Lara thought. 'I can't believe I was so stupid!'

She opened her door and saw that there was absolutely no mirror hanging there at all.

'See? I knew it. There's nothing wrong with me. It was just a nightmare.'

Then suddenly, she thought about just how real the mirror had looked.

She felt scared and she had goose bumps all over.

"Mom?"

"What is it dear?" Mrs. Denning asked.

"Do you know when I fell asleep?"

"Well, dear," Mrs. Denning explained, "You've been sleeping ever since we've set foot into this house. You must have been so very tired."

Lara felt relieved. She decided not to think about that stupid mirror again. She was a brave girl, and she wasn't going to let this little dream ruin her day.

"I'm not a baby anymore," she said out loud. "Nothing can scare me!"

And with her head raised high, she went back into her room to take a nap.

"Dinner is ready, Lara!" Mrs. Denning shouted.

"Coming! Coming!" Lara yelled back.

Lara had been exploring the rest of the house.

She had found an attic right above her room, and she had been cleaning it the entire evening.

It was a strange little attic, with barely any light coming into it.

The windows had been barred with wooden panels. There were strange looking books all across the walls.

One of these books, in particular, caught Lara's eyes. It was the strange cover that enchanted her.

The book had a thick, red cover and strange golden letters engraved onto it.

Then, in the center, she saw what she couldn't believe.

It was the mirror from her dreams!

Right in the center of the book, the mirror was drawn in carefully, with beautiful details in gold.

'I wonder... Was it a dream? Or was it real?' Lara thought.

"Lara! The food is getting cold!" "Yes, mom. I'm coming."

Lara carefully placed the book back into its corner and ran downstairs.
